Gardens

Maple Glen

Maple Glen is a well-established woodland and wetland garden with many different informal areas. A rose and a white garden, with designs different to the rest of the property, are being developed in a separate area behind a large hedge.

Briarfield Farm

Briarfield Farm is a garden with several areas and private relaxing spaces. It has modern rose beds, an herb garden, woodland, orchard, and a romantic heritage garden all enclosed in a 60-year-old macrocarpa hedge. This is a garden designed for all seasons, with waves of colour, texture, and fragrance. Roses smother the road-front, scramble into fruit trees and are tucked into unexpected places.

Joan Scarlet Garden

Joan Scarlet’s Garden is in direct contrast to the other gardens on our tour. This is a small-town garden where the owner has integrated her home with her garden and is happy for tourists to see inside her house. The garden has English-style plantings.

Blue Willow Farm

Blue Willow Farm has evolved after the family left home. The owner and her late husband planted all the trees on the property and enjoy growing plants in the English-cottage garden style. The garden contains many “treasures” including some alpine plants.

Jessie Calder Garden

The Jessie Calder Garden is a large garden of old roses within Queens Park, a large municipal garden owned by the Invercargill City Council. The Jessie Calder garden was declared a “Garden of National Significance” Heritage Roses New Zealand in 2005.

Further information is contained in a brochure that will be supplied to delegates.

Tudor Park

Tudor Park contains heritage roses, trees, shrubs, perennials: everything except annuals. Landscaping is in the English style. There is a long walk with large pergolas covered in old roses, a rondel enclosed by a hornbeam hedge, a small canal covered in water lilies. The canal connects to a small, enclosed garden with a sundial. Tudor Park was awarded for a large garden by the Southland Garden Trust.

Castlemaine

Castlemaine is a large, landscaped garden featuring garden rooms and statuary. Around every corner comes a wonderful new vista. A calming ambience to conclude the Post-Conference Tour.
